A-list celebrity psychic reveals all

By SUSAN M. KIRSCHBAUM

JLo wants to know what she thinks about nearly everything. Hillary Clinton consults with her regularly. She even has an line to the White House.

Not bad for a middle-aged psychic from Queens.

Since Carmen Harra's book, "Everyday Karma" (Ballantine Books; $22.95) was released last November, it's been a bestseller. She's since appeared on the "Today" show and "Larry King Live." She now gets at least fifty calls a day — more than triple her usual.

"I'll tell you something," says socialite and client Cornelia Guest. "Everybody in New York sees this woman. I mean everyone! And most of what she's told me comes true. My jaw dropped." Guest claims Harra's accuracy is the talk of social circles.

Lopez was introduced to Harra a little over a year ago through her sister, Fox News anchor Lynda. Harra says that she told J.Lo, who was still married to husband number two, that she was "going to meet a guy with the initial 'B,' who lived mainly in L.A. And she said, 'You're crazy,'" recalls Harra. "And I said, 'You're going to fall in love with this man, and he's going to propose to you, and he's going to be your great love.'"

Yet she says that J.Lo — who hasn't had a reading recently — needs to watch out: "She has ego problems," says Harra (admittedly, this is an observation even the non-clairvoyant population could easily make). "She needs to be less selfish — she has to be more giving in relationships." Harra adds that she severely wounded both Puffy and ex-husband Cris Judd, and that if she doesn't shape up, her marriage to Affleck will only last two years.

Perhaps even more alarming to J.Lo, Harra says her career will fizzle by 2008.

"She's got too much going on. For her she's too trapped. It's all about success," says Harra. "She can either transform spiritually like Madonna or end up like Liz Taylor: eight marriages, alcoholism, a tumor." As for Lopez's sister Lynda (who is also still a client), she "cries to me," says Harra. "J.Lo's fame tore them apart."

Harra is a petite, perky brunette with a wide smile and affinity for bright pink clothing, jewelry, and make-up. She says she uses a combination of numerology, astrology, and good-old-fashioned intuition when doing readings. When she was five, she nearly drowned, and claims that this near-death experience left her with paranormal powers: she says she hears voices "from the other side."

Jennifer Lopez:
'You need to seek help or you'll wind up childless and alone. Ben Affleck's family does not approve, but he truly loves you.'

Courteney Cox:
I told her, 'You should move to L.A. and you will get a big TV job and marry a younger man.'

Hillary Clinton:
'You will run against another female candidate in the 2008 presidential election.'

TAKE MY ADVICE FOR 2003:

Prince William wants to end the monarchy.

Madonna changes her karma by severing her dependency on fame. With the birth of her second son, she has reached true peace.

A few planes will crash this year: two over water, one over Asia, the other over Venezuela.

A young Senator in his forties will pass away.

She sees clients at her offices on 61st and Fifth Ave., and charges $200 a reading.

Her first famous client was Candice Bergen, who gave Harra a blurb for her book "Through Carmen, one sees the invisible, believes the incredible, and receives the impossible."

Her client roster rapidly grew to include Courteney Cox ("I told her to move to L.A. and that she would get a big TV job and marry a younger man"), model Frederique van der Waal, Hillary Clinton, and other celebrities whose names she says she cannot reveal. She will say, however, that she foresaw Clinton's Senate win back in 1997, when she did her first reading for the then-First Lady. "She said, 'I don't even want to run,'" says Harra. She adds that she still talks to the Senator regularly on the phone through an intermediary, and predicts that Hillary will run against another female candidate in the 2008 presidential election.

She also predicts that Hillary will never divorce Bill, and that her daughter, Chelsea, will be married in two years — and not to Ian Klaus, the Oxford student with whom she's been on a non-stop make-out tour of Europe.

"People usually come to me when they've suffered a separation or a loss, or they're blocked emotionally," says Harra, who adds that what she does "is a form of therapy."

She also thinks that since September 11, New Yorkers in particular "are more insecure," and want the comfort of knowing what is supposed to happen next.

Even the White House keeps a line to Harra. Jimmy Walker, first cousin to George W. and a former producer at ABC News, called Harra after 9/11 to ask if Bin Laden would be found. "I told him no then," says Harra, who was also consulted about the snipers and says she gave Walker the initials of both men.

She she says the current president is working out a few lifetimes of "personal karma" with Saddam Hussein.

"We won't be going to war with Iraq," she predicts. "The world will change as we know it. And there will be turmoil with Bush by the fall."

But in general, Harra says we all have much to be positive about, predicting a safer world by 2033. The worst she sees for New York? That, like the lost city of Atlantis, it'll end up "underwater and having to rebuild itself again."

"But," she adds with a laugh, "that won't happen until around 3070."
